For the Chronicle. THE KANSAS EMMIGRANT'S SONG,

Our Pilgrim Fathers crossed the deep-A small yet fearless band---And landed where the wild waves sweep New England's rocky strand.

They left their native clime afar, Beyond the Atlantic wave, And, guided by the western star, Sought freedom or a grave.

And we, the sons who bear their name With fearless hearts prepare, Another western wild to tame And build an Empire there. Wego, as flow our native rills

Wild-bounding to the sea, To plant upon the Kansus hills The standard of the free. O'er all that wide and bright domain Our freedom s light to pour,

And proudly to unturl again The flag our rathers bore. Like them, towards the setting sun, A fearless band we go.

Where valites smile, and rivers run That sparkle as they flow. The Pitgrim spirit with us goes. And when its blessings full

The wild shall blosom as the rose, The letter leave the thrall. With blessings on the honored land

Which holds our Father's dust; With strength in each toil kardened hand And fixed in Heaven our trust.

We go, exclting as we roll ; Our prairies wild and free. The home of Liberty.

To this each dauntless heart aspires, And will each danger dure, May barn forever there.
